Sidewalks are no place for bikes: Safety advocates

Whether you're elderly or not. However, a plan to allow seniors to use sidewalks may go ahead

SCOTT
TAYLOR

scott.taylor@metronews.ca

The city's director of roads and transportation admits it's more dangerous for cyclists to ride on sidewalks than on city streets — but said seniors may still be allowed to do so.

Ed Soldo said a plan to allow London's seniors to use sidewalks may still fly, but — after several people voiced concerns — more public input is required first.

The idea was pitched after Smokescreen?

"Every study ever done shows it's more dangerous to cycle on the sidewalk. This is what the city of London does ... instead of really dealing with cycling safety."

London Cycling Link co-founder Gary Brown

the city consulted with seniors and many said they feel more at risk on streets.

Not so, said Soldo.

"In general, it is less safe for seniors to ride on the sidewalk. There's the possibility of having conflicts with pedestrians, there are more collision points with people coming out of their driveways and various intersection roadways," he said. "That's why we generally want people to ride their bicycle on the road."

Currently, children 14 years old and younger are allowed to ride on sidewalks. Others face a $140 fine.

London Cycling Link co-founder Gary Brown accused the city of raising the sidewalk issue as a smokescreen. He said London needs to reflect cities such as Waterloo, which have become cycle friendly.

"Waterloo, which is light years ahead of us, is going to put more bike lanes down, yet what is our council discussing? Who can ride on the sidewalk," he said. "It's embarrassing."

Shine that light

City to light up for good causes

City buildings can expect to gain some extra colour at night under a new policy.

Facades can be lit up for a week by LED lighting if organizations make a request and it's a good cause. The agreement, OK'd Tuesday by a council committee, formalizes an already existing practice, with one big exception: The Shine the Light campaign run by the London Women's Abused Centre is the only organization that will get an entire month, and that's every year, the committee agreed.

Currently, city hall and other buildings are lit purple for the campaign, which is focused on ending abuse of women.

Megan Walker, the centre's executive director, spoke during the meeting about the value of the November campaign, which has spread across Canada.

City clerk Cathy Saunders said the policy was being formalized in response to a request from council.

She said the number of requests to light buildings had "increased substantially" since the World Figure Skating Championships were held in London, and granted the privilege of a lighting celebration.

The idea behind a published policy is so that everyone knows the rules.

There was support for the policy and the Shine the Light exception from all five council members at Tuesday's meeting.

Coun. Bud Polhill said Shine the Light deserved special treatment because it "represents more than half the population."

Religious flags ban sparks accusations

Bylaw discussion. City is 'embarrassed' and 'ashamed' by religion, says businessman

mike.donachie@metrone.ca

The city of London was accused of being "ashamed of Christianity" Tuesday by the head of a business organization.

And it was all about flying a flag.

G. J. Rancourt, of the Christian Businessmen's Council of London, was at city hall for a discussion about a bylaw change that will ban religious flags from the community flagpole across from Victoria Park.

He was allowed to speak at a meeting of council's corporate service committee, and he said, surprisingly, that he was in favour of the ban.

But, he argued, his organization's flag — which is white with a crucifix on it — should be exempt from the rule as it represented "Judeo-Christian heritage," and not religion.

"If we in London continue to shy away from, and be ashamed of, Christianity with the hope of becoming all things to all religions, if we are in favour of a political correctness that robs the city of its integrity, or passing by-laws for the sake of expediency alone, then enemies such as increased crime and a high unemployment in this city will not be defeated," said Rancourt.

"If we are embarrassed of God, when would God continue his blessings on this city?"

But his appeal didn't sway the councillors, with Coun. Nancy Branscombe formally moving that the policy, with the religious flags ban, be accepted.

Coun. Joe Swan described the bylaw as "clear and fair."

It was unanimously accepted, and the issue will be on the agenda at full council next week.

At a glance

- City clerk Cathy Saunders said the ban on religious flags is to avoid offending any section of London's diverse community.
- Asked why the city has a Christmas tree but won't allow a flag with a cross, she explained that Christmas is a festive holiday, not a religious one.
- The city doesn't allow prayers before meetings but invites religious leaders to the first meeting of a new council after elections.

More than 160 crashes reported after first storm

All 400-series highways were shut down at various times and more than 160 collisions were reported by the west region OPP, as the area was dealt its first winter storm of the season Monday and Tuesday.

Police said many motorists didn't change their driving habits to match the slippery conditions. "The closures were caused by drivers which officers on the road say were oblivious to the winter conditions," OPP Sgt. Dave Rektor said.

Several vehicles contributed to a chain-reaction collision just west of the city Tuesday morning.

"Winter driving isn't rocket science. In fact, it's quite simple: When you see snow, go slow," Rektor added.

Middlesex-London EMS deputy chief of operations John Prno said calls for service nearly overwhelmed his paramedics early Tuesday morning.

"The weather really hit us early. By 8 a.m., we were out of ambulances, mostly for crashes on the highways," he said.

In the city, the number of calls was up as well, as much for collisions as for slips and falls. SCOTT TAYLOR/METRO

Woodstock. Donation boxes snatched: Police

Woodstock police are searching for a man who swiped two donation boxes in the area of Dundas Street and Springbank Avenue on Monday.

The first incident occurred at about 5:15 p.m., when the suspect entered a business and grabbed a donation box from the counter and fled.

Eight minutes later, the same man grabbed another donation box from a countertop and left the area on foot, police say.

No one was injured. Police haven't said what kind of donation boxes were involved.

The suspect was last seen wearing a white hoodie, dark pants, a black jacket and carrying a blue or black backpack.

Sentencing law 'cruel and unusual'

Mandatory minimum sentences for gun possession are "cruel and unusual punishment," Ontario's top court ruled Tuesday in striking down two planks of Ottawa's law-and-order agenda.

The sentencing laws, enacted as part of the Conservatives' 2008 omnibus bill, could see people sent to prison for three years for what would amount to a licence violation, the Court of Appeal for Ontario ruled.

Struck down were the three-year mandatory minimum for a first offence of possessing a loaded prohibited gun and for five years on the second offence.

links with the community. Delegates from campus and community will come together Thursday at Engage Western, a conference designed to focus the way the university can be a force for good.

It's all about creating positive social change, said Marcia Steyaert, community relations specialist at Western.

"Western quite often in many different ways, at the individual level and the group level, we collaborate with different organizations in the city of London," said Steyaert. "We wanted to bring people together on campus and off campus to talk about some of the ways that we do that, and maybe improve and increase the way we collaborate with the community."

"It's the start of a conversation."

Asked if it's about bursting the "campus bubble" that's perceived as keeping students in a separate world, she emphasized there's already plenty of community engagement.

"We do feel that there are so many different ways that we are already connected with the community," she continued. "It's just not necessarily in a controlled way."

Already, there's the University Students' Council running community events including street cleanups, plus there's the way Western research benefits the wider public. Also, staff and students do voluntary work across London.

Steyaert said the initiative also isn't in response to any of the recent controversy with policing or with students' behaviour in the community, which are expected to come to a head with a public meeting at the city's town and gown committee Wednesday night.

The conference was set up in response to a call, during the summer, from the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, which has community collaboration as a theme this year.

Engage Western

- The conference takes place Thursday and is already fully-booked.
- It will feature a panel discussion on community-university engagement, including experts from the Lawson Research Institute, Pillar Nonprofit Network and the Student Success Centre at Western.

SOURCE: ONTARIO NON-PROFIT HOUSING ASSOCIATION'S ANNUAL WAITING LIST SURVEY

Waiting lists for affordable housing in London are dipping as those elsewhere continued a "slow and steady climb" in 2012, says a new report.

Almost 158,500 Ontario households — including 2,172 in London — were waiting for affordable homes as of December last year, according to the Ontario Non-Profit Housing Association's annual waiting list survey.

The provincial number represents more than three per cent of Ontario households, the highest rate since the association began collecting statistics in 2003, the report notes.

The local number, however, is the lowest it's been since the survey started — declining by more than 50 per cent.

Last year, 849 households were moved into affordable units in London while 722 new applications were received, the report says.

The average wait time for housing locally is a little more than two years.

Abe Oudshoorn, a London housing advocate, said the statistics can be a bit misleading.

The data only covers rented-to-income units. Although that is the largest source, it represents "only about half of the affordable housing in London," he said.

Sharad Kerur, executive director of the province's association, said the federal-provincial affordable housing program is helping to create about 1,500 new affordable rental units annually in Ontario.

But relatively few are affordable to low-income households on waiting lists who are paying between 30 per cent and 50 per cent of their incomes on rent, he said.

"Aging baby boomers, stagnant wages and population growth are steadily driving demand," Kerur said. "New units aren't being built and all levels of government need to take greater responsibility to keep existing stock in good repair." METRO, WITH FILES FROM TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

"I like me" is the message, and a new book by a London campaigner is spreading it around schools.

Saidat Vandenberg is a motivational speaker, a singer, an entertainer and a youth activist. Now, she's an author, too.

She works with kids in schools to help them make positive choices and help each other.

Her new book, Tadias and the Pitbully Tree, has a powerful message for young people.

"The book's story was a story that I'd been telling for years in my primary show, and I really wanted to get that out there," said Vandenberg. "Tadias is a girl who's trying to get to a place called I Like Me. She encounters a bully who happens to be a tree."

Why a tree? To keep gender out of the story. A bully can be anyone, she said.

In the story, the frightened girl is given three magic words by her mother: "I like me."

Vandenberg continued: "The thing I really like about

"Not only does a person being bullied need help, but the person who's bullying is probably going through something as well.

"It's not that we need to try to justify their actions, but we understand that person needs help in their own way."

Vandenberg, 41, who's originally from Minneapolis, tours schools with three age-appropriate shows covering junior kindergarten to Grade 12.

She teaches kids to treat others as they would want to be treated, and even uses their attitudes to pop star Justin Bieber as an example. If they jeer Bieber — and they usually do — she asks them to think about how it might make him feel if he was there.

"We need to realize that the things we want for ourselves are the things that we don't bring out for other people," she adds. "We have to give that same respect away."

She continued: "Students began networking at the conference, and we want them to be able to stay connected afterwards using a social network medium in a positive way."

The idea is to use social media to open positive lines of communication, but that's just the start.

Students at each school are encouraged to come up with an action plan for the school year with the support and collective voice of students, teachers, support staff, parents and community members.

"Students are our most powerful partners in the school system for effecting positive change," said Edgar.

"It is the collective voices of youth that will help us to move forward in all areas."

Students across the dis-

'Anonymous' condoms cause uproar at Calgary university

Students at Calgary's Mount Royal University have come under intense scrutiny after planning to distribute up to 1,000 condoms with the message "Anonymously get inside" on them.

Those most bothered by the initiative, steered by administrators with the MRU Confessions Facebook page, are alleging it "promotes rape culture" and are demanding an apology.

While the moderators of the page said Tuesday they intend to solicit a new slogan from one of nearly 7,000 followers of their Facebook page, they maintained the condoms were meant as an "innocent joke."

"We weren't made aware of the gravity of it until people started mentioning it to us publicly ... I'll say that, on our part, maybe we should have thought it through," said one man, who identified himself as "Admin2."

Tensions at Mount Royal's campus came to a head after an opinion piece was published by staff with the student newspaper, The Reflector, which deemed the condoms "Borderline rape paraphernalia."

The Facebook page's administrators dismissed those claims as "absurd," and said the slogan was a play on an event called "Masked Anonymous" they hosted for Mount Royal students in October.

The controversial slogan on these condoms has come under intense criticism from peers and faculty at Calgary's Mount Royal University. FACEBOOK

Laval, Que. Three girls suffer minor injuries after car crashes into daycare

Three young girls escaped with minor injuries Tuesday after a car smashed through the plate-glass window of the daycare centre they attended.

The children were rushed to hospital for treatment along with the driver of the car, an 80-year-old woman who suffered shock and minor injuries to her back, said Const. Franco Di Genova.

The three girls were aged three, four and five years old and were not seriously injured, Di Genova said, adding one of them had been released from hospital and another was expected to be sent home by the end of the afternoon.

One little girl was either hit by the vehicle or flying debris and suffered wounds to her face, said Di Genova. She was expected to be released from hospital on Wednesday.

A doctor at Montreal's Ste-Justine Hospital said she is stable and that the injuries could have been much worse.

"We're pleased the injuries are not as serious as we could imagine given the situation," said Dr. Antonio D'Angelo.

Admitting to having smoked crack cocaine and drinking himself into a stupor is no reason for Toronto Mayor Rob Ford to take time out to seek help, his brother said Tuesday.

Despite intense pressure on Ford to step down, Coun. Doug Ford insisted the mayor would not do so, saying he is getting "the support he needs."

"He doesn't want to be stepping aside for two weeks," Ford said. "He has to keep busy."

On Wednesday, a city councillor is expected to put forward a non-binding motion demanding Ford take a leave of absence.

Feds 'lack clear policy' on use of surveillance drones, study says

New research. Report says public discussion needed as law enforcement adopts drone technology

There must be clear policies about the sort of personal information flying drones are allowed to collect before Canadian police and others begin using them on a large scale, warns a new study.

However, the "potential for Protesting artist speaks about nailing genitals in Red Square

The performance artist who was arrested after stripping naked and nailing his scrotum to the cobblestones of Red Square has been released. Pyotr Pavlenko, 29, drove a nail through his genitals on Sunday while sitting on Russia's most famous square before police took him to the hospital and then to custody. A court dismissed charges of "petty hooliganism" and released him Monday. The artist is no stranger to pain — in 2012 he sewed his mouth shut with a coarse thread in support of Pussy Riot. Metro spoke with Pavlenko to find out how he managed to perform his latest stunt.

Q: How did you pull this stunt before they could stop you?

A: I understood that there is surveillance everywhere. But I had an advantage because every other illegal protest on Red Square has people waving flags and is very visible. The police can react on such things.

Q: What was the message behind your performance?

A: I heard that when conditions are bad in prison, convicts drive nails into their bodies. To this I added an act of humility before my country. What I mean is that people find what is excessive, on what nails them but they do nothing. It makes them feel helpless.

Q: Did you speak with doctors about the possible consequences of such performance?

A: I didn't notice any consequences to my health. You know, I didn't try to nail my eye! When I was nailing my testicles I wasn't scared at all, but when I was preparing (for the stunt), I was. All the fears and phobias doubled up.

Q: How did you prepare?

A: I thought about my clothes. And I tried to undress quickly. I had to be sure that I could take off my clothes in 40 seconds. Otherwise, the stunt could fail.

Q: Of course, it must have been hard to ready yourself and nail your scrotum ...

A: Fear is a natural feeling, when you are thinking about it. The only thing that was really important for me was not to sever a vein — there would be a lot of blood then. I had to try to hammer a nail and not to hit a blue line. But as for the pain, I was full of adrenaline so I felt none.

Q: How has your family reacted?

A: Oksana Shalygina, who is working with me in the online project Political Propaganda, is always supportive. I'm against the institution of marriage, so I can say she is my ally. We have two children — they, too, in some way, are "partners."

Spain. Neighbour sues piano player

To most people, noise pollution is a jet engine roaring over their head. For one Spanish woman, it was a neighbour practising piano.

The woman has taken her neighbours in the apartment below, a 27-year-old pianist and her parents, to court. Now prosecutors want to send all three to jail for over seven years on charges of psychological damage and noise pollution.

Neighbours often complain about street noise in Spain, but prosecutors seeking jail time for someone playing the piano is unheard of — especially since that musician is now a professional concert pianist.

At the trial in the northeastern city of Gerona, Sonia Bosom claimed she suffered noise pollution due to the five-days-a-week, eight-hour practice sessions of Laia Martin.

Martin, 27, denies that she played at home that often.

On Monday, the El País newspaper reported that Bosom told the court she now hates pianos so much she can't even stand to see them in a film. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Food, water, medical supplies only trickling into Philippines

Tacloban. The city of 220,000 bore the full force of the winds and the tsunami-like storm surges Friday

Desperately needed food, water and medical aid are only trickling into this city that took the worst blow from Typhoon Haiyan, while thousands of victims jammed the damaged airport Tuesday, seeking to be evacuated.

"We need help. Nothing is happening. We haven't eaten since yesterday afternoon," pleaded a weeping Aristone Balute, an 81-year-old woman who failed to get a flight out of Tacloban for Manila, the capital. Her clothes were soaked from a pouring rain and tears streamed down her face.

Five days after what could be the Philippines' deadliest disaster, aid is coming — pallets of supplies and teams of doctors are waiting to get into Tacloban — but the challenges of delivering the assistance means few in the stricken city have received help.

"There is a huge amount that we need to do. We have not been able to get into the remote communities," UN humanitarian chief Valerie Amos said in Manila, launching an appeal for $301 million to help the more than 11 million people estimated to be affected by the storm.

"Even in Tacloban, because of the debris and the difficulties with logistics and so on, we have not been able to get in the level of supply that we would want to. We are going to do as much as we can to bring in more," she said. Her office said she planned to visit the city.

Vancouver picks up new habit: Recycling pesky cigarette butts

Smoke 'em if you got 'em — just don't forget to recycle 'em afterward.

Vancouver launched the world's first municipal cigarette butt recycling program on Tuesday, a pilot project that aims to get butts off the streets.

TerraCycle, a global company that recycles "stuff that can't be recycled" like chewing gum and dirty diapers, will install 110 recycling receptacles with sticks that say "Recycle Your Butts Here" TerraCycle founder Tom Szaky said Monday.

Staff from Downtown Eastside non-profits EMBERS and United We Can will collect the butts, with the bottle depot shipping the waste to TerraCycle for processing into industrial plastics.

The so-called "Cigarette Waste Brigade" aims to get the toxic waste off the streets and help the city meet its greenest city goals.

Reaction

• Sherri, smoker: "I always put it in the garbage — I try to be respectful. I think these are very productive things."

• Charles Gauthier, Downtown Vancouver Business Improvement Association: "This is a better solution since it deals with end product. All we were doing before was picking them up and throwing them away."

• Irritated smoker who didn't want to be named: "What about the people who pick up cigarette butts and roll their own smokes?"

penny apiece during Car Free Day.

Former smoker Miguel Araiza collected enough butts during the West End Cleanup project to earn $40 in three hours — a sum he found more profitable than returning bottles, he told Metro at the time.

But the bottle depot model ultimately wasn't feasible since "a penny a butt adds up to be quite expensive," Szaky said. The final model is cheaper and more hygienic as it doesn't require citizens to pick up toxic waste, he said.

TerraCycle is funding the pilot with the goal of replicating the program around the world.

"Vancouver was the first city, so we wanted to invest in it to make it happen," Szaky said. Two major American cities are already looking at copying the idea, he added.

Help really wanted

A good nanny is hard to find

Although it seems there's no shortage of help-wanted and job-seeker postings for temporary workers online, some say finding a temporary worker is harder than some might think.

Melissa Namer, a Moose Jaw resident trying to find a child-care provider to look after her kids while she returns to school, said she's had no luck finding a temporary worker.

"I've had that ad up for about a month and I've had no successful people (apply)," she said in a phone interview.

"It's mostly teenagers and young kids who just want to make a few bucks, while I'm looking for someone to look after my kids while I'm in school."

She said while there has been some response, those applying have been under-qualified or unwilling to commit.

Temp Stumbles Upon a Shootout

Get back!" A policeman standing in front of the yellow-taped off parking lot barked at us to move. We saw police snipers on the roof.

Sarah No. 3 was close by and we asked what was happening.

"Kevin Taylor is bunkered inside the remains of the warehouse."

"Really?"

"He says he's going to kill himself."

"Oh God. Any hostages?"

"They don't think so."

Talk about drama. Just then, the Shoeman and his father, Xu Senior, pulled up across the street and came over. We filled them in. Xu Senior went in pursuit of more info while, as per our agreement, Shoeman pretended to speak English as though he'd been taught in Peoples' Glorious Education Facility Number 43,607: "This episode with gun create many unglorious feng shui problems. May jeopardize once benevolent deal to buy company."

The Sarahs both saw their buyout stake evaporating, panicked, and went to hunt for Mel from Payroll.

Shoeman reached into a Whole Foods paper bag for snacks. Once the Sarahs were out of earshot I asked him what he was eating.

"Two hundred bucks worth of raw unfarmed British Columbia salmon. Nothing like it for marathon training. Want some?"

"Ick, no thanks. Would a shooting really kill the sale of the company?"

"My dad's totally old school. He can't buy a building someone's died in. A standoff like this could be just as bad. I could care less, but I think we have to fly back to China tonight and discuss this with the family."

"Really?"

"Yup. Which also upsets my training schedule, because yesterday I found this perfect running track nearby – an elementary school they closed because of tax cuts. The soft unmown grass is perfect on my feet."

I grew worried... "What about... what about our secret plan?"

He winked at me. "One day at a time, Shannon. By the way, I was guest at a poker night and I found out what they make at the defense contractor next door there."

It was like in the movies: guys in black running across the roof, with more guys closing in from all sides.

BALONEY IS AS BALONEY DOES

The Internet has changed everything, from shopping to sex.

It's even changed cheating. There's a website based in Toronto called Ashley Madison that caters to consenting married people looking for an affair.

And it makes no bones about it: "Life is short. Have an affair" is the tag line.

The site contends that there are zillions of other like-minded cheaters just like you looking for a dangerous liaison. But one woman says many of the adventurous females on the site are fake profiles.

And she should know. She wrote 'em.

Someone named Dorian Silva claims she wrote 1,000 fake profiles in three weeks, so many that she came down with severe carpal tunnel syndrome, and is now suing the website for $20 million US for damages.

There's no honour among cheats, apparently.

Ashley Madison is owned by Toronto businessman Noel Bi-derman, who is worth $100 million US according to CelebrityNetWorth.com, mainly on the strength of AshleyMadison.com. There is no actual Ashley Madison, but that hasn't stopped over 17 million people from trying to hook up with her.

JUST SAYIN'
Paul Sullivan

Biderman told Barbara Walters on The View that the reason the site is so popular is that it focuses on the needs of adult female cheetahs — and nothing attracts a male of the species more than a female of the same species.

So it's important that AshleyMadison.etc is fully stocked with attractive adult female cheetahs, even if they allegedly have to make up so many fakes that the profilers sustain $20 million injuries.

Faced with Ms. Silva's not-so-shocking revelation, AshleyMadison.etc is crying foul, contending that it's "100 per cent authentic" and the company "won't give in to extortion." It also sent Business Insider pics of Dorian, taken from her Facebook page, riding a jet ski and playing the bongos, all taken since she retired in alleged pain from writing fake profiles.

You have to wonder about someone who sues her employer for damage to her wrists, then turns around and posts photos of herself engaging in activities that require healthy wrists. Obviously, all that fake profile damaged more than her wrists. It spread to her brain.

There's a lesson in all of this. In fact, there's probably more than one. Let's try to sort them out.

For example, it's possible to make $100 million out of nothing. (Oh, and Noel Biderman is happily married and 100 per cent faithful to his wife. Do as I say...)

Or if that profile "WillingToBeWhateverYouWantMeToBe365" sounds too good to be true, it is.

Or Dorian? Why didn't you listen to your lawyer when he told you not to go on Facebook with the bongos?

Or you still don't understand that the Internet is hazardous to your health, and not just your wrists? Tried bird watching?

Or how about: Baloney's still baloney, as time goes by.

Seized Afghan narcotics burned

More than 20 tonnes of drugs and thousands of bottles of alcohol were burned by Afghan authorities in their fight against the narcotics trade amid a fresh surge in opium cultivation.

Government officials, ambassadors and military commanders gathered on a mountain outside Kabul to burn the drugs, which were seized from smugglers in recent months. METRO

Narcotics burned
400 kg of heroine
1,200 kg of morphine
2,000 kg of opium
10,000 kg of hashish

Afghan opium

- Afghanistan produces more than 90 per cent of the world's opium, the key ingredient of heroin.
- One kilo of dry opium sells at $160 to $200. In contrast, a kilo of wheat pays only 41 cents.
- Since 2001, the U.S. has spent $6.3 billion to curb the Afghan opium industry.

Government's view

"This event shows our increased capabilities fighting drugs."

Baz Mohammad Ahmadi, Afghan deputy interior minister for counter-narcotic programs

Ahmadi said the drugs were seized over the past 10 months in and around Kabul. Mohammad Ibrahim Azhar, the deputy counter-narcotics minister, said that opium cultivation had increased this year, but refused to provide details to reporters before the official launch of the upcoming 2013 drugs report.

The familiar tale of friends and frenemies intertwined

New movie. The Best Man Holiday follows a traditional formula of rivalries and rekindled romances that are all wrapped up in a reunion

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse

scene@metronews.ca

The Return of the Secaucus Seven sees a group of college friends come together 10 years after they were arrested on the way to a 1970 peace protest in Washington D.C.

In the 1979 film they reminisce about the good old days, flirt and establish the basic theme of all reunion movies: "What's a little reunion without a little drama?"

This weekend Terrence Howard, Sanaa Lathan, Taye Diggs and Morris Chestnut are part of a core group of college friends who put that theory to the test in The Best Man Holiday. As IMDB says, expect "long-forgotten rivalries and romances to be ignited."

The idea of seeing old friends and frenemies after a long break offers loads of opportunities for drama and comedy.

Romy and Michele's High School Reunion played their high school 10th anniversary get together for laughs. The pair of friends big up their

The Best Man Holiday opens this weekend. CONTRIBUTED

One more

More somber is Young Adult, a Charlize Theron dramedy about Mavis Grey (Theron), a ghostwriter of novels for teens who accepts an invite for a baby shower from her high school ex-boyfriend, hoping that he will fall back post Grade 12 adventures in an effort to intimidate their old friends.

"Well, I thought the whole point of going to the reunion was to impress people," says

Michele (Lisa Kudrow). "I mean, how am I gonna impress anybody by selling balloon smocks at Bargain Mart."

National Lampoon's Class Reunion takes a different comedic approach to the subject.

Mixing murder with nostalgia, it's the story of Walter Baylor (Blackie Dammett, father of the Red Hot Chili Peppers' singer Anthony Kiedis), an unhinged nerd seeking revenge during his 10th high school reunion as payback for a mean prank played on him during senior year.

"One more move and she gets a hole where she doesn't need one," says Walter.

Grosse Pointe Blank takes a more wistful approach to post school socials. John Cusack plays a mysterious graduate who has a life changing epiphany 10 years after graduation.

"You know," he says, "when you started getting invited to your 10-year high school reunion, time is catching up."

Complicating matters is his job. He's a hit man.

"What am I gonna say? I killed the president of Paraguay with a fork. How've you been?"

He's hired to bump off the father of his high school girlfriend for whom he still has feelings.

Write, sing, repeat – it's the Gray way

Looking back. The singer's new tour takes on her old material, which "still resonate to the present," she says

MARA LITTMAN
Metro World News

At the turn of the century, Macy Gray burst onto the music scene, winning multiple Grammy and MTV awards for her 1999 album,

On How Life Is.

Audiences fell for her signature raspy voice and unique blend of soul, rock, disco and hip-hop. Her sound was both new and retro.

Gray is still doing this same two-step of one foot in the future and one pointing to the past with her current tour, which takes listeners through the full On How Life Is album. She is adamant that the tour is a bigger step forward than it is a step back, though.

"I'm not a look-back person. I rarely do that. It still means a lot to me, and what's happening in my life now," she says of the album. "When I'm up there (the songs) still resonate to the present. I didn't write them to be that way, but I think with simple life stuff, you'll have it years from now. You're still dealing with love, your spirit and yourself, forever."

In the 14 years since her initial fame, Gray has raised three children, appeared in a number of films and produced seven studio albums.

Life remains her biggest commercial success.

The fact that she's performing these songs at venues that are the same size as the ones she played when she was first starting out doesn't seem to faze her.

"You learn a lot playing clubs and having people right in your face," she says.

"But my mind and my heart are always on the same planet. That doesn't change for me. The atmosphere, the vibe and how loud the crowd is, (that's) always different."

Macy Gray is slowly making her way back into the spotlight.

Julia Roberts

Julia's not gonna read your #hate

Don't expect Julia Roberts to join Twitter anytime soon. "It's kind of like cotton candy," she says of social media in an interview with Marie Claire. "It looks so appealing and you just can't resist getting in there, and then you just end up with sticky fingers and it lasted an instant." Actually, Roberts seems to stay away from the Internet in general as much as possible, making a point of not Googling herself or reading comments on articles about her. "I have too much potential for collapse. There's an anonymity that makes people feel safe to participate in hatefulness," she explains. "I like a good old-fashioned fistfight if people are pissed off at each other."

Justin's thin skin is showing

Justin Timberlake has had a tough autumn. His little-seen film Runner Runner and his album, The 20/20 Experience: 2 of 2, were both panned by critics. Variety even ran a piece titled Why Justin Timberlake Should Stop Acting. For a guy who's been beloved basically his whole career, the sudden change in fortune is bound to be bewildering. "Where did all this vitriol come from? It's mean. And I'm not cut out for it," he told GQ. "The movie didn't do well at the box office, so I should quit? Hold on a second. If I was somebody else, you wouldn't have said that. I have the No. 1 album this week, and I shouldn't have released it? Come on, man. You sound like a dickhead. ... It just shocked me because, like, you're trade magazines. None of your opinions count. And by the way, none of you can do it."

Look, I am solidly in the Jennifer Lawrence Can Do No Wrong camp. She could wear a coonskin cap and shoes made out of coconut husks and I'd be like, "Brava!" But the critics don't feel the way I do about JLaw — they are after the actress big time about the Christian Dior dress she wore to the U.K. premiere of The Hunger Games: Catching Fire on Monday in London. "It honestly looks like someone crushed a bunch of multi-coloured suckers and stuck them onto the bottom half of this dress," opined one blogger. And in a post titled, Catching Fire Premiere Or A Project Runway Fashion Show (You Make The Call), Dlisted asked, "How can you explain wearing Sandra Lee's

Ryan Reynolds

So that story about Ryan Reynolds having to spend most of a recent flight from New York to New Orleans sans shirt after drunken fellow passenger puked on his cashmere sweater? Totally fake, according to the man himself. "I heard about that," he tells Vulture. "That is utterly made-up. I don't know where that stuff comes from. It's fantastic, it sounds like a great story." In fact, Reynolds remembers exactly the last time someone vomited on him. "Someone threw up on me in fifth grade. That was the last time it happened," he says. "Sherry Piper, while we were square dancing, Trafalgar Elementary School."

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

Russ needs to play fair, and Leo can't play at all: Thus sayeth Clooney

George Clooney is still pretty sore about Russell Crowe bashing him in the press back in 2005. "He picked a fight with me. He started it for no reason at all," Clooney tells Esquire magazine. "He put out this thing saying, 'George Clooney, Harrison Ford and Robert De Niro are sellouts.' He really went after me. And so I sent him a note going, 'Dude, the only people who succeed when two famous people are fighting is People magazine. What the f— is wrong with you?'"

The Gravity star also thinks Leonardo DiCaprio should spend more time practising basketball and less time boasting about his skills on the court. "The discrepancy between their game

Many devout Catholics and spirited hikers make the popular 500-mile trek in the footsteps of medieval pilgrims from Saint-Jean-Pied-de-Port in France to Santiago de Compostela, Spain, the final resting place of St James. Fast food icons have inspired equally lengthy quests with their faithful lured by righteous burgers, Japanese hot dogs, and crunchy habit-forming Korean chicken wings.

Umami Burger

There's sweet, sour, salty, bitter, and then there's umami. The fifth dimension of taste is a subtle yet savory yellowness known to inspire hour-long lines. This now bicoastal, but still California centric, artisanal burger emporium has a dozen meaty options at each location but you can never go wrong with a standard Umami burger topped with roasted tomato, shiitake mushrooms, caramelized onions and a parmesan crisp.

Where to satisfy the craving: Palo Alto's location has a library theme, drawing bookish decor cues from close by Stanford University. Do some high tech networking in Silicon Valley and then grab a hold of one of Umami's high-concept burgers by its lightly toasted soft Portuguese buns.

White Castle

Slider nirvana White Castle, the beefy grail at the end of the first Harold & Kumar movie, is a cathedral of aromatic mini-burgers where a group gorge on a 20-burger order isn't anything to bat a lash at. While they have a formidable presence in the Northeast, their steam-grilled stronghold is in the Midwest. The drawbridge was lowered on the first White Castle in Wichita in 1921.

Where to satisfy the craving: Kansas hasn't had any locations for years but there are a ton in Missouri, so hit St. Louis, scope out the gateway arch and treat yourself to at least a half-dozen of the itty-bitty burger beauties.

In-N-Out Burger

Even if you've never had the pleasure of acquainting your taste buds with the burger bliss that has created a food revolution, you're probably familiar with their not-so-secret menu. Additions to the sparse menu board include the 4 X 4 (a quad-decker), Protein Style (bun-less lettuce wrap) and the famous Animal Style with grilled onions, pickles, extra spread and a mustard cooked patty.

Where to satisfy the craving: While the chain is spreading eastward, the L.A. area remains In-N-Out central. The original location was demolished decades ago but the company recently built a replica of the 100-square-foot drive-thru burger stand that started it all in Baldwin Park.

Japadog

Spearheading a Japanese-style franks invasion, Vancouver-based Japadogs dresses up all beef dogs, brats and kurobuta (the "kobe beef of pork") with snazzy toppings. Their Terimayo dog, garnished with teriyaki, mayo and seaweed, started the craze. Other exotic dogs feature bonito flakes, yakisoba noodles, grated daikon, and edamame. There's even a dessert dog called "ice age," a deep fried bun filled with your choice of five flavours of ice cream.

Where to satisfy the craving: Vansterdam's street carts lit the fuse on this foodie frenzy-starter but their first restaurant location at 530 Robson St. offers a more expansive menu, including fries topped with everything from butter and shoyu to ume shiso. They've also got a Manhattan outpost.

CHERRYLET/Flickr

BonChon

Buffalo's stranglehold on the mantle of best chicken wings in the world appears to be slipping as this Busan South Korea export continues to sizzle. Utilizing an Asian frying technique that calls for a thinner batter (resulting in a cracklier crust) and subbing blue cheese and celery for soy-garlic and pickled radish cubes, these aren't your daddy's chicken wings. Made to order, hand brushed BonChon wings are a food addiction waiting to happen.

Where to satisfy the craving: BonChon's crunchy wing joints have sprung up in Thailand and all over the Philippines but there's also five locations in the New York area and another handful in New Jersey.

The combination of black beans and sweet mango is outstanding. I serve this salsa over chicken or other fish and even as a salad dressing. Sautéing the corn adds a barbecued flavour.

1. To make the salsa: In a non-stick skillet sprayed with cooking spray, cook the corn on medium-high heat for 8 minutes or just until the corn is dry and beginning to brown. Place it in a serving dish. Stir in the remaining salsa ingredients.

2. In a nonstick grill pan sprayed with cooking spray, grill the salmon on medium-high heat for 5 minutes per side or just until medium done (10 minutes per inch/2.5 cm of fish thickness). Serve the salsa overtop of the fish. THE BEST OF ROSE REISMAN (WHITECAP BOOKS) BY ROSE REISMAN.

ROAD TO THE THREE PEAT

Fair thee well, future employee!

Acing an on-site extravaganza.

Career fairs bring an opportunity of discovery and networking. These guidelines will prepare you for a productive day!

JESSICA CRUZ
TalentEgg.ca

Regardless of your industry of choice, chances are there's a career fair that matches your interests.

Attending a career fair can be a good way to complement your online research and networking and there's no harm in showing up when employers are coming to meet individuals just like you.

Where do I find out about these fairs?

On campus: If you're a student, you're in luck! Campus recruiters visit career fairs to hire students like yourself. Check your career centre's website, online calendar or visit their office at the beginning of the term.

Community listings: Community job fairs happen all year. Check city or community event listings online. Keep a lookout for industry or company specific job fairs in your area as well. A quick search can reveal wonders.

Planning ahead

Think about it like a marketing campaign. What's Recruiters set up shop at career events in order to reach out to people just like you. Don't be afraid to chat them up. iSTOCK your purpose? What kind of job or company are you looking for? What are you trying to learn? Having a purpose will guide your visit.

The first thing you should look for is an online employer listing. Knowing which companies will attend can determine if a particular fair is worth your time. Some fairs might include an online floor plan, company descriptions or available positions.

What do I bring?

Resumés/cover letters: Bring a few copies in a small folder or bag. Your community employment centres and campus career centres can help edit your resumés through appointments or workshops.

References: Keep your references tucked away with your resumé and cover letters. On the spot interviews can happen anytime or company reps might scan your resumé and ask for references.

Notebook/tablet: Have tools for jotting notes, contact information and helpful details.

Pen: Make sure you have one that works.

Step right up!

Ask the right questions and network

- Engage in a conversation and be brief. Be clear about your goals and what you're looking for.
- Ask questions about the positions, requirements and the representative's experiences with the company. If your goals are unclear, that's fine too. Think of the event as an opportunity to gather ideas about your future.

Business cards: It's a great way to give out your contact information in quick meeting settings.

What do I wear?

Most career and job fairs have a business casual dress code. You want to make a good impression, but don't overdo it. Contact the organizer or look at past event photos if you aren't sure what the proper dress code is.

Listen

Make sure you put yourself out there, but don't talk more than you listen. The employer might answer questions before you ask them. Other people may ask questions that the representative will answer on the spot. Let other people ask the common questions and save your energy for engaging conversation.

Hurdle, Francona named managers of the year

Terry Francona of the Cleveland Indians won the AL Manager of the Year award in a close vote, and Clint Hurdle of the Pittsburgh Pirates was the runaway winner in the National League after both guided small-budget teams to charming turnarounds.

Francona edged John Farrell of the World Series champion Boston Red Sox by 16 points in Baseball Writers' Association of America balloting announced Tuesday. Francona received 16 of 30 first-place votes to 12 for Farrell.

It was the first Manager of the Year honour for Francona, who led the Red Sox to World Series titles in 2004 and 2007. Voting is conducted before the post-season.

Hurdle was selected first on 25 of 30 NL ballots after steering the Pirates to the playoffs in their first winning season since 1992.

The Southern Mississippi shuttle continues for the London Lightning.

Six-foot-five veteran world traveller Jason Forte is the latest in the string of Lightning acquisitions from the Hattiesburg, Miss., university.

"When Elvin (Mims) graduated, I was coming in and when I graduated Maurice (Bolden) was coming in. So it was like three different eras," Forte said at Lightning practice Tuesday.

Forte said he also acted as a mentor to Bolden, the six-foot-nine Lightning rookie, when he would return to the university after his pro season.

Forte's relationships with the Lightning extend to the pro ranks when he played in the Continental Basketball Association. He and Mims won a championship with the Yakima (Washington) Sea Kings in 2006, and the Lightning's Tim Ellis joined the team the next season.

And during that 2006 run to the championship, one of the opposing coaches was the Lightning's Micheal Ray Richardson, in charge of the Oklahoma City Cavalry at the time.

Richardson said. "I coached against him and I know what he can do."

Richardson, after two losses and a one-point victory to open the season, said this week he needs more veteran influence on the roster. Forte fits the bill with only his final signing approval from FIBA standing in his way of taking the court Friday.

"He brings leadership, he's a veteran. He's won championships all over. He's played in France, Argentina," Richardson said. "He's a real good solid basketball player, a great defender, a great rebounder."

"We need guys who are leaders, who are vocal, guys who understand how to play the game. And who know what it takes to win championships."

Richardson, after two losses and a one-point victory to open the season, said this week he needs more veteran influence on the roster. Forte fits the bill with only his final signing approval from FIBA standing in his way of taking the court Friday.

"It doesn't matter as long as I'm on the floor doing what I do best, using my overall skill," Forte said. "I've got a pretty good basketball IQ."

The Lightning, after a slow start to their schedule, play three games in less than 72 hours on the weekend.

They play a home game at 7 p.m. Friday against the Windsor Express, on the road Saturday night in Brampton and then a 4 p.m. game Sunday at the Budweiser Gardens against Mississauga Power.

Another new face?

The Lightning are also looking at guard Maurice Carter, 30, to possibly join the team.

- "Need to see a couple more days of practice," Lightning general manager Taylor Brown said Tuesday.

- Carter last played professionally in Colombia where he averaged 28 points and 38 minutes.

Tampa hoping to continue winning ways sans Stamkos

NHL. Centre for East-leading Lightning was tied for league lead in goals, points when he broke his leg in Monday's game

Everything was going right for the Tampa Bay Lightning this season until star centre Steven Stamkos' right leg slammed into a goalpost in Boston.

Now the Lightning need to find ways to keep on winning without their offensive motor and one of the NHL's biggest stars.

"We don't have much time to think about it," defenceman Eric Brewer said Tuesday ahead of the Bolts' game against the Montreal Canadiens. "We're

Stepping up

"Stammer's goals are going to be missed, but other guys are going to have to score more.... Hopefully I'll be able to lead the way here."

not going to replace that loss, but we can try to deal with it and play well and carry on."

Stamkos underwent surgery Tuesday in Boston to repair a broken shin bone. The 23-year-old will be out indefinitely.

"I can't give you a time-frame on whether he's going to be eight, 12, 16 weeks or months," Lightning general manager Steve Yzerman said in Toronto. "All I can say is he's out indefinitely for now. I think after speaking with the doctors, after today probably we'll have a better idea of the time frame."

Even his participation for Canada at the 2014 Winter Olympics in February is in some doubt.

"He will start rehabbing immediately, but by all accounts everything went well today. There was no unexpected issues," Yzerman said.

Stamkos was backchecking hard against Boston defenceman Dougie Hamilton in the second period of a Monday afternoon matinee when he lost his footing. His left foot hit and dislodged the net and his right leg swung round and struck the post. He tried unsuccessfully to get up twice before he was taken off on a stretcher. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Sochi Olympics
If Stamkos is out, who's in?

Hockey Canada has a number of potential alternatives to consider if a broken right tibia keeps Stamkos from playing in Sochi.

After Canada struggled to score goals on the bigger, international-sized ice in Turin in 2006, pure scorers are likely to be a major priority. So far this NHL season, no one fits that bill more than Corey Perry of the Anaheim Ducks and Matt Duchene of the Colorado Avalanche.

Marty St. Louis, who won the Art Ross Trophy last season for Yzerman's Lightning, also might get a chance to play with Pittsburgh Penguins captain Sidney Crosby.

Claude Giroux of the Philadelphia Flyers and Jamie Benn of the Dallas Stars could also see their stocks rise. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Gimme 10? NHL GMs mull OT extension

Changing the structure of overtime in NHL regular-season games might not be imminent, but continued discussions among the league's general managers show there is interest in extending the extra period to cut down on the number of shootouts.

Overtime was one of many topics discussed at Tuesday's annual general managers meeting after Hockey Hall of Fame induction night, along with fighting, hybrid icing and the playoff format that was introduced for this season. No formal rule changes

Drawing the line

Bullying was brought up at the meeting in light of the situation with Richie Incognito and Jonathan Martin of the NFL's Miami Dolphins.

- "Every now and then, we all have to be reminded about what's acceptable and what's not," Lightning GM Steve Yzerman said.

came about, though the purpose of this get-together is more to set up the next meeting in March.

Forty of the first 262 games this season have gone to a shootout. GMs have been discussing making overtime 10 minutes to cut down on shootouts "to some degree," according to Ken Holland of the Detroit Red Wings. Holland proposed five minutes of four-on-four and then three minutes of three-on-three, while Doug Armstrong of the St. Louis Blues and others want simply 10 minutes of four-on-four.

Hawks sign Shaw to extension

The Chicago Blackhawks have agreed to terms with forward Andrew Shaw on a two-year contract extension through the 2015-16 season.

The 22-year-old Shaw had nine goals and six assists in 48 games last year, his first full season in the NHL. He added five goals and four assists as the Blackhawks won the Stanley Cup, and he is currently sixth on the team with 11 points and 51 hits through 18 games. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

2014 Toyota Corolla

ALL PHOTOS WHEELBASEMEDIA.COM

Review. It's looking like an early Christmas for Toyota fans

wheelbasemedia.com

For a small car, the Corolla has some big numbers to tout. Like the fact that in 47 years, Toyota has sold more than 40 million of them and currently operates 16 factories worldwide that supply Corollas to 154 countries.

The all-new 11th-generation North American sedan comes on strong with style — especially from the windshield forward — that its broad base of customers are not used to seeing. Nothing too radical, mind you, but just enough design drama to cause some politely muffled oohs and ahs (see above right).

The distance between the front and rear wheels has increased by a whopping 10 centimetres, rivalling the current segment space champ Dodge Dart.

Note that both the Dart and Corolla are virtually dead-heat even for interior volume and could almost pass for mid-sizers. The added space between the wheels improves front and rear legroom slightly, which is welcome in any small car.

Interior styling has improved, but in a conservative way that differs from the Corolla's more daring competitors. Still, the clearly marked gauges and switches are logically placed and easy to decipher.

It's only when you check under the hood that a sense of déjà vu really kicks in. A 132-horsepower four-cylinder carries over from the previous generation. It's connected to a six-speed manual transmission for the base CE and sporty S models. A four-speed automatic transmission is optional for the L, while a new continuously variable unit (CVT) is optional for the S, but standard on the LE and LE Eco.

To reduce that "rubber-band" slippage sensation that's common to many CVTs (including Toyota's Prius hybrids), engineers dialed in seven artificial shift points. These function automatically to simulate the action of a regular automatic transmission. With the S model, they can be manually controlled using steering-wheel-mounted paddles. Aside from using a more efficient engine with special variable valve timing, the ECO's figures are achieved with the help of underbody panels that improve the car's aerodynamics to reduce highway-speed fuel consumption.

The starting-point Corolla CE, which carries a $17,600 base price, has a split-folding rear seat, power windows and locks plus a basic four-speaker audio system. The LE/LE Eco trims include air conditioning, 16-inch alloy wheels (15-inch steelies are on the CE).

You also get a backup camera, remote keyless entry, heated front seats (power-adjustable for the driver), touch-screen display with voice recognition and Bluetooth wireless connectivity.

Opting for the S brings with it a blacked-out grille, 17-inch wheels, heated outside mirrors

Design

The front end is certainly a lot more aggressively defined with its enlarged lower air intake and inset bumper. The side intakes seem a bit oversized, but the total effect is quite appealing. Along with its mostly new shape, the Corolla's more rigid platform supports a body that's a few ticks longer and wider.

Fuel economy

The fuel-saving LE ECO model comes with a 140-horsepower version of the 1.8 that's rated at 6.5 l/100 km in the city and 4.6 on the highway, compared to the base engine's 6.9/5.2 rating with the CVT.

The style of the interior is conservative and very logical.

and additional instrumentation with customizable settings.

A navigation system, power moonroof and push-button start head the list of options, along with a start/stop system that shuts off the engine for short periods, such as at stoplights or in stop-and-go traffic. This, of course, saves fuel.
